RESTORING GLORY — Exploration Summer Programs broke ground Monday on the renovation of the old Norwood Press building. The nonprofit, which provides programs at Yale University, Wellesley College, and St. Mark's School, plans to return 12-foot windows to the building's facade, which were covered by cement years ago, and reattach globe lamps to the rod iron and brick fence outside. The group also intends to renovate the inside of the building with offices and training space for teachers, but the space will retain the feel of a factory. "We want to bring it back to its old glory," spokesman Christian Housh said of the 1894 building.
